Scandal Involving Nichols, Devlin, Hall and Craver.

By THOMAS J. GALLAGHER.

When James A. Murphy died Jan. 18, conservative and respected of American sporting men terminated. He was a remarkable man whose word was the equivalent of a bond. Born in Rome, N. Y., Aug. 17, 1846, he may be said to have grown up in Utica, where he became interested in harness horses, Associated in business with David Tenny Pulsifer he became a strong backer of the latter's great horse Tenny. From a great ad-mirer of Jacob Schaefer, the "Wizard of Billiards," he shifted to a staunch backer of Frank C. Ives.

It expanded rapidly. Public confidence was evidenced by the number and volume of transactions. Increasing busi-ness necessitated more room. A large hall just across the "Alley" with an entrance from Madison street was obtained and into it the furniture and paraphernalia of the original quarters were moved. In this place there was morning betting, wagering during the running of races in the afternoon and nightly ses-sions at which entries for following days were posted and on which there were combinations and pools. Every night during meetings at Washington Park the place was packed and wagering was as heavy as any ever recorded in any poolroom in the country

Then along came Adolph Lichstern, an expert mathematician and telegrapher, who developed at St. Paul. He submitted a plan for handling a brokerage business of the bucket shop order and getting prompt and accurate stock and Board of Trade quotations. Murphy became interested, and tried to interest Riley and Pulsifer, both of whom ig-nored the proposition. From a moderate beginning, the brokerage business grew his warmest admirers.
